

Here at The Greenway, we have decided to work closely with the house of Veuve Clicquot and we are proud to offer you the famous “Yellow Label” as our house Champagne.

With only 10 cellar masters since 1772 Veuve Clicquot has shared a passion for wine making through the generations, always staying true to the house moto “Only one quality, the finest. “

Here are some important dates in the history of this famous house...

1772 Philippe Clicquot founds the House. His son, François, later marries Barbe Nicole Ponsardin 1775 The House exports its first Rosé Champagne

1805 François Clicquot passes away. At age 27, Madame Veuve Clicquot takes over the business (Veuve means widow in French) to become one of the first business women of modern times

1810 Madame Clicquot produces the first vintage wine of the Champagne Region

1814 Madame Clicquot defies the Continental blockade paralyzing Europe and manages to dispatch a shipment of 10,000 bottles to Russia, with such success that the House could not keep up with demand

1816 With her daring, avant-garde spirit, Madame Clicquot invents the “riddling” method, a process to clarify Champagne. The process is used by all Champagne Houses today

1866 Madame Clicquot passes away at age 89. The business is passed to Edouard Werlé

Today Veuve Clicquot is the official Champagne of the England Cricket Team and sponsor of ‘The Business Women of the Year Awards’. The newest additions to its sublime portfolio are the Veuve Cliquot RICH -a rich Champagne to be served with ingredients over ice- and the Veuve Cliquot EBEO, an extra brut marriage of selected old reserve wines.

The Champagne province is located near the northern limits of the wine world along the 49th parallel. The high altitude and mean annual temperature of 10 °C (50 °F) creates a difficult environment for wine grapes to fully ripen. Ripening is aided by the presence of forests which helps to stabilize temperatures and maintain moisture in the soil. The primary grapes used in the production of Champagne are Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Pinot Meunier. Champagne appellation law only allows grapes grown according to appellation rules in specifically designated plots within the appellation to be used in the production of Champagne. High levels of acidity in the resulting grape which is ideal for sparkling wine.

France's eastern borders contain some of its most historic vineyards. Alsace is the home of aromatic, spicy varieties such as Riesling, Pinot Gris and Gewurztraminer, their textural richness a perfect match with chicken and pork.

White Bordeaux is predominantly, and exclusively in the case of the sweet Sauternes, made from Sémillon, Sauvignon Blanc and Muscadelle - Typical blends are usually 80% Sémillon, 20% Sauvignon Blanc. As with the reds, white Bordeaux wines are usually blends, most commonly of Sémillon and a smaller proportion of Sauvignon Blanc. Other permitted grape varieties are Sauvignon Gris, Ugni Blanc, Colombard, Merlot Blanc, Ondenc and Mauzac.

Burgundy: From Auxerre and Chablis in the north to the great vineyards of the Cote d'Or, the terroir is a mixture of limestone and clay, where the grape variety chardonnay finds its truest and most subtle expression. From the simpler village wines to the truly profound and opulent 1^{er} and Grand Cru examples, one can see the amazing diversity of this famous region.

The white wines are characterised by their freshness and vibrant acidity particularly the aromatic Sauvignons (Sancerre, Pouilly, Menetou) and the richer, more honeyed Chenins (Vouvray, for example) have the weight and texture to marry with complex food.

The flavours of the Mediterranean, a mixture of ripe warmth and garrigue herbs, imprints itself on the best wines from this region. There is a medley of unusual grape varieties from aromatic honeyed Viognier, whose spiritual home is Condrieu and fellow Rhone cohorts, Marsanne and Roussanne, to the Languedoc mainstay of Grenache Blanc.

Germany produces some of the world's very finest white wines, presenting natural, Grapey richness complemented by racy acidity. Riesling is a king here, offering purity and precision. At their best such wines can be electric and the perfect complement to a vast array of dishes and some trickier ingredients.

Some rare grape varieties are found in this country producing some fine unique wines. Locally it is Zweigelt while Grüner Veltliner and Blaufränkisch are traditionally as well grown in Austria's eastern neighbour countries.

Known mainly for its astonishing dessert wines we are these days able to find some surprisingly fine dry wines in Hungary. Cuvée 113 consists of Furmint, Hárslevelü, Chardonnay, Sauvignon Blanc, Yellow Muscat. A seamless blend that offers ripe stone fruit, melon and the herbal quality of the Hárslevelü grape. Complex and distinctive, yet mouth-wateringly crisp and refreshing, this is a great example of new-wave Hungarian white wine.

It would be difficult to imagine a more fascinating wine-producing country than Italy. Home to an enormous range of climates, topographies and soil types, Italy also boasts hundreds of indigenous grape varieties with their own distinctive flavour profiles.

The best white wines in Spain come from the coastal areas where the heat is tempered by maritime breezes allowing the grapes to express fresh fruit and vibrant acidity. Galicia is home to the famous Albariño grape that flourishes in the temperate Atlantic climate. Albariño and associated Galician grapes works brilliantly with the fantastic shellfish and seafood of the region.

Argentina has the greatest concentration of high altitude vineyards in the world, which can increase the development of aromatics in the grapes and they can benefit from extended time on the vines without the danger of producing wines which are too big and alcoholic.

Chile is in the enviable position of having an ideal climate for growing grapes, in fact it is one country which could very easily practise organic production since grapes flourish in these conditions and very few diseases give any real problem. Also since Chile is a relative newcomer to the international wine making scene she has the advantage of some of the most modern and well equipped wineries in the world, plus some very well trained winemakers who have gained experience in other parts of the world.

As a largest wine producer outside Europe, but also one of the most enthusiastic consumers of wine, the United States exports are skewed towards basic bulk brands, so easily created in to the hot central vineyard. California makes world class Chardonnay; the wines are rich, complex and oaky.

At 360 years, old this year, South Africa's wine history is longer than most new world countries, but it joined the modern era only recently, when sanctions were lifted post-apartheid and it emerged blinking onto the world stage. South Africa, after Loire, is one of the strongest countries for Chenin, which ripens to reveal luscious orchard and tropical fruits.

Two nations with many similarities and increasing differences. Australia is familiar for Chardonnays, both the powerful, oaky style but also the more versatile “unwooded” type. Sauvignon/Semillon blends are common but Sauvignon itself is more seen in parts of South Australia. New Zealand, conversely, celebrates Sauvignon, particularly in its largest region, namely Marlborough. Different styles are emerging – from the more herbaceous ones to more grown up versions with lees-ageing and consequent good texture in the mouth. The aromatic varieties are also becoming popular, particularly Riesling, Pinot Gris and Gewurztraminer.

There is no doubting Australia’s potential for high quality, exciting wines particularly from clever sites that harness altitude and maritime cool.

New Zealand’s wines continue to soar in popularity with wine drinkers, driven by the exuberant, stylish Marlborough Sauvignon Blancs that have become the country’s vinous signature.

Bordeaux is a huge region producing red wines at every level, but is obviously renowned for its classed growths. Broadly speaking it can be divided into the left bank (the familiar communes of Pauillac, Saint-Julien, Saint Estephe and Margaux as well as Graves and the various other Medoc appellations) and the right bank vineyards that lie above the Dordogne river namely Saint-Emilion and its various satellites and Pomerol plus a host of other appellations. Cabernet Sauvignon dominates the left bank appellations whereas Merlot is favoured on the right bank. Thus the wines are often stylistically quite different, as different terroirs suit different grapes. Vintages are important but not always a reliable guide.

Burgundy means Pinot. The area is sometimes described as a “minefield”, but the rule seems to apply “follow the grower”. And Burgundy is all about terroir, from village to village, from vineyard to vineyard, from one row of vines to another. And of course, vintage matters also. In Auxerre the wines tend to be lighter and fresher, emphasizing the fruit. Moving into the Cotes de Nuits, young village wines tend to show delicious primary Pinot aromas and fruit (violets, red cherries, raspberries), whereas the 1er cru wines are meatier and express darker fruit flavours allied to other notes of wood and mineral. As all the wines age (and some do more quickly than others) they begin to unfurl other aromatic flavours – hints of forest here, notes of truffle there.

South of Burgundy lies the Maconnais and south of that is Beaujolais and all its (ten) crus. Here Pinot Noir is supplanted by Gamay. As its easiest Gamay is a fruit compote of a grape, but amongst the poor quality, broken soils of Morgon, for example, the wines become more structured and age worthy. Gamay is also one of the most versatile red grape varieties.

There is a small geographical but a big stylistic divide between wines from northern and southern Rhone. The former has a cooler microclimate, different soils and favours the Syrah grape. Syrah thrives in this terroir and makes a unique style, a touch floral and a lot mineral. The wines of Cote-Rotie, Hermitage and Cornas have a pure intensity that is difficult to match. In the south Grenache grape comes to the fore, although it is usually blended with Syrah and a variety of others. Wines from Grenache tend to have a warm, spicy, jammy quality. They are great with game.

Vine are grown the full length of Italy, from the alpine foothills to the southern tip of Sicily. Culture and cuisine are inextricably linked to Italian wine styles, enshrined in traditions. Italy extends from the Alps to Africa encompassing myriad regions and terroirs. Piedmont lies in the north with Nebbiolo as its king, a grape responsible for some of the finest red wines in Italy. Further south, Tuscany is about Sangiovese, featuring in Chianti, Brunello and many of the “Super-Tuscans”. The south of Italy is naturally warmer and here the wines are powerful and sweetly fruit. All Italian reds, regardless of their provenance, demand food!

Spain has been a producer of quality wines for many years, but she seems finally to be coming of age and producing stunning wines at all price levels. She produces well-made and highly respected wines from international grape varieties such as cabernet sauvignon, merlot etc. But she is also producing excellent wines from local grapes.

The quality of the wines produced has increased immeasurably whilst prices have remained good for the quality on offer

Many people think of big brand wines when they think of Australia as a wine producer, and indeed she has cornered a very successful market with such brand wines. There is however another side to Australian wines, and that is of smaller producers who take a more artisan approach to vine growing and wine making.

An UK wine writer observes, when commenting on New Zealand pinot noir that, while "comparisons with burgundy are inevitable; New Zealand pinot noir is rapidly developing its own distinctive style, often with deeper colour, purer fruit and higher alcohol. While regional differences are apparent, the best wines do have burgundy's elusive complexity, texture and "pinosity" and are capable of ageing".

South Africa is one of the world's most exciting wine-producing regions today, with enormous potential for high-quality wines and is often characterised as "new world ripeness meets old world finesse".

The Californian wines of Napa and Sonoma command world-wide respect. Cabernet Sauvignon and Merlot grow in these regions, although California also plays host to a range of Rhone and Italian varietals. Oregon, with its temperate climate on the 45th parallel, is beginning to make world class Pinot Noir. The Dundee Hills is the epicentre of the Oregon wine revolution.

Argentina seems to have made an excellent job of making the Malbec grape her own for red wine production, though she is making noteworthy wines from many other international varieties as well.

Whereas Chile used to be predominantly known for her red wines, she is now making world class wines in all styles and in each price bracket.

Lebanon is among the oldest sites of wine production in the world.

The Israelite prophet Hosea (780–725 B.C.) is said to have urged his followers to return to Yahweh so that "they will blossom as the vine, and their fragrance will be like the wine of Lebanon".

The Phoenicians of its coastal strip were instrumental in spreading wine and viticulture throughout the Mediterranean in ancient times.

Accept what life offers you and try to drink from every cup. All wines should be tasted; some should only be sipped, but with others, drink the whole bottle.
